Engineering dispute to continue as talks collapse

BY ALAN PIKE, LABOUR CORRESPONDENT

The national engineering industry dispute will continue in an atmosphere of increasing bitterness. Talks between union leaders and employers collapsed yesterday.

Engineering workers are being told to go ahead with a second two-day strike on Monday and Tuesday and maintain an overtime ban which is leading to increasing threats of layoffs, short-time working and even bankruptcies in the industry.

HOW TO MAKE A SHEIK SHAKE.

If the members of the oil producing countries hoped to get rich by putting petrol prices up, to over £1 a gallon, they'll be furious when they see the official government mileage figures.

In fact they'll be shaking with rage. Because instead of guzzling petrol in great gulps the Renault range are merely sipping it.

Just look at the figures compared to those of our biggest rival.

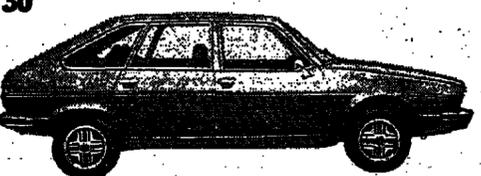

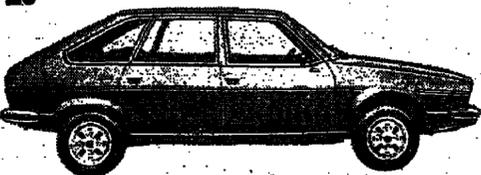

They mean that everyone buying a Renault is going to be saving petrol and money.

And that probably wasn't what the Sheiks had in mind.

Still, maybe that is why Renault sales usually go up with the price of petrol.

dollar production values. But Ridley Scott has done such an expert job of direction—squeezing heartbeat tension out of scenes of waiting and silence...

On an unknown planet, an astronaut picks his way across the ribbly walkway crossing the lower deck of a derelict spacecraft. He peers down into the eerie depths at his side.

And there hasn't been a space movie which looks as resplendent as this since 2001. Scott and his designers have made the "Nostromo" a wonderful labyrinth of trompe l'oeil turns and tunnels...

For the remaining crew members—Mr. Hurt not having survived his evisceration—it is now time for Hunt the Monster. Will they get it before it gets them? Well, Harry Dean Stanton won't—the ship's woe-fac'd, laconic engineer...

the only reservation is that, after shredding our nerves so effectively in the first half, the film becomes a trifle indulgent towards the end.
